Miner's son ready to strike gold in Cox Plate

RACING
BEN DORRIES

The Cox Plate is the dream for many jockeys but miner's son Willie Pike had never even heard of the famous race when he cut his teeth riding in Coolgardie.

The Wizard, who will ride Cox Plate fancy Arcadia Queen ($5) tomorrow, grew up in the Goldfields. His dad was a miner and his mum was a cleaner who worked three jobs to help put food on the table for Pike and his three siblings.

Pike always assumed he was going to spend his life underground, following the family mining tradition, and there was little time for Cox Plate dreams.

"Even in my earliest riding career I was only ever worried about my own backyard. I was a bush jockey. My focus was on a Meekatharra Cup and for anyone who knows where that is they will get a laugh," Pike told Racenet.

"I didn't even know the Cox Plate existed. I stumbled into being a jockey. I never sat down and thought that could be a good career choice, I just gave it a go. If you asked me at that point I would have said I am going to be a miner, as that's what we do."

Pike may never have mined for gold but plenty he has touched has turned to gold in his three-month riding stint in Melbourne, enjoying a golden day on October 10 when he rode four winners at Caulfield.

He pocketed his first two Group 1s in Victoria with triumphs aboard Ole Kirk in the Caulfield Guineas and Arcadia Queen, who surprised hot favourite Russian Camelot in the Caulfield Stakes.

"When I had that good day at Caulfield, I guess everyone noticed me a bit more," Pike said.

"I suppose it meant that the people who already liked me like me more and the ones who don't like me just stay quiet for five minutes."

Green's big ton puts him in Test frame

Cameron Green fell agonisingly short of a double century but showed why he's firmly in the national selection frame — with or without the ball — during Western Australia's drawn Sheffield Shield match against NSW.
